SUMMER PREVIEW 2026

A note before market

Most of fall is on the books by now. What's left is the work that decides how the season actually lands: the fill-ins on the lines that are already moving, the holiday orders that need to be placed before August, the new vendor you didn't have time to walk through in January and want a real look at now. June and July are short, and most of what ships for Q4 gets ordered in them.

This booklet is the shortlist. The vendors our members are turning to for fill-in, for holiday, and for the lines worth adding before the year closes out. Some you already know. Some are new this season. All of them have something worth your attention before market.

Two ways to save this summer

Vendors marked with a summer tag are offering an additional five percent off PPP pricing through June and July, and at select summer markets. It's a real discount on the orders that matter most right now, from vendors who wanted to show up for members during the stretch that decides Q4.

Every other vendor in these pages honors your standard PPP discount year-round. Share your retail number when you place the order. The savings come off automatically.

At market

Dallas in June. Atlanta in July. Vegas at the end of summer. The vendor index at the back lists showrooms and booths so you can map your route before you go. The summer-tagged vendors are the ones offering the additional five percent through July, so it's worth knowing which ones you're planning to see.

To our vendor partners

Thank you for being in this booklet. The shops reading it are the ones that hand-wrap the gift, write the card by hand, and remember the customer's daughter's name. They're choosing your work to put on their tables and in their windows, and we're grateful you trusted us to put it in front of them.

THE MONTHS OF JUNE AND JULY

Women and family owned, Betty Blu is built on the quiet pull of scent and memory. Handcrafted in the USA, each candle is poured in small batches with clean, phthalate free fragrance oils. Every fragrance begins with a feeling, a screened porch in July, a kitchen at dusk in October, the first cold morning that asks for a sweater. Made to be lit, gifted, and remembered, season after season, in homes that linger.

A NOTE FROM OUR DESK

Summer market has a different quality than January. The pace is slower, the conversations last a little longer, and there's more room to buy the way you actually want to.

We've been thinking about what it means to buy well this season. Not just buy smart, though that matters. Buy in a way that reflects the kind of retail you're already practicing in your own shop.

Most of you spend your year asking customers to slow down. To choose the handmade thing. To know the maker's name. To understand that a price tag reflects a real person doing real work.

The vendors writing your orders this summer are small businesses too. Family-run, mostly. The way you buy from them is the way you're asking your customers to buy from you.

So this summer, buy the way you'd want to be bought from. Walk the showrooms that have shown up for you. Place the order that reflects your shop. That's the kind of season we're hoping for, on both sides of the order form.

FIVE THINGS YOU CAN LET GO OF AT SUMMER MARKET

Most market advice is written for first-timers. After your fifth or tenth show, the rules start to loosen a little. This summer, give yourself permission to experience market differently.

1 You don't have to plan every aisle before you arrive. If you already know your favorite showrooms, let the first hour or two unfold naturally. Walk in, look around, notice what pulls you in. The map will still be there later when you're ready to be efficient.

2 You don't have to photograph everything. The pictures that matter most are usually the orders you placed and the pieces you're still thinking about that night. The rest tends to blur together once you're home, and that's part of the process too.

3 You don't have to fill every hour of the day. Some of the best conversations happen in the quieter moments between appointments, when someone has time to sit down, share honestly, and connect beyond the order form. Leave yourself a little room for that.

4 You don't have to walk in with someone else's eye. The trend reports and preview emails can be helpful, but your instincts matter too. Your shop has its own personality, rhythm, and customer. Trust yourself enough to notice what feels right for your space.

5 You don't have to apologize for starting small. Every strong store and every lasting vendor relationship starts somewhere. The vendors worth growing with understand that independent retail is built thoughtfully, one good order at a time.

Market gets better when you stop trying to do it perfectly and start allowing yourself to experience it more personally.
